

East Church – 7 October 2010

What's happening?

Well, it is always the way isn't it? Those last details take time.

And that is the way it is at the East Church too. The bulk of the work, inside and out, is complete, but there are still a few things to do before the church can be opened again.

The communion table and the harmonium need to come back into the church. Once back in place the harmonium is going to have some tuning and repairs, so that it will be once again playing at its sweetest.

The newly painted Laird's loft is looking pretty smart in the decor that we think graced it around 1800.

More than 300 visitors to the church on 'Doors Open Day' were able to admire the church from all angles, and find out more about the building's history and the current conservation project.

The most obvious is that the electrical work needs to be completed – we're just waiting for the light shade order to arrive.
