

East Church: Watertight for winter

29 September 2009

The re-slating of the roof is completed and the Ballachulish slates look a treat. Now there's just the stone ridges to go on to finish the work. These will be a mixture from the church, from the barn that provided the slates, and new ridge stones to match the old. Keep an eye on the roof tops to see if you can spot the difference...

The last coat of Singelton Birch lime wash will include a touch of tallow to give some extra waterproofing and allow the lime harl to dry more slowly. This will give a harder, more durable finish.

In 12 months time there'll be a final coat of lime wash applied, to make sure that it has many years protection from all that the Highland weather throws at it.

The second coat of lime harl is nearly complete, just several coats of lime wash to go now - and then the scaffolding can come down - to reveal the exterior in all its glory.
